Autism Spectrum Disorder (ASD) is a common developmental disability impacting 1 in 68 individuals. Persons with ASD range from severely impacted to very high functioning yet share similar core differences. Understanding these differences and how they impact functioning across the spectrum is important when interacting with a person with ASD. This presentation will describe current understanding of diagnostic criteria, core differences in ASD, and how these differences impact daily functioning.